Why do GPs sometimes charge fees?

Isn't the NHS supposed to be free?

The National Health Service provides most health care to most people free of charge, but there are exceptions: prescription charges have existed since 1951, and there are several other services for which fees are charged. Sometimes the charge is made to cover some of the cost of treatment, for example, dental fees; in other cases, it is because the service is not covered by the NHS, for example, medical reports for insurance companies.

Surely the doctor is being paid anyway?

It is important to understand that GPs are not employed by the NHS, they are self-employed, and they have to cover their costs – staff, buildings, heating, lighting etc – in the same way as any small businesses. The NHS covers these costs for NHS work, but not non-NHS work the fee has to cover the doctor's costs.

What is covered by the NHS and what is not?

The government's contract with GPs covers medical services to NHS patients. In recent years, more and more organisations have been involving doctors in a whole range of non-medical work. Sometimes the only reason that GP's are asked is because they are in a position of trust in the community, or because an insurance company or employer wants to be sure that information provided is true and accurate.

Examples of non-NHS Services for which GP's can charge their NHS patients are:

Accident/sickness insurance certificates

Certain travel vaccinations

Private medical insurance reports

Examples of non-NHS service which can charge other institutions are:

Medical reports for an insurance company

Some reports for the DSS/Benefits Agency

Examinations of local authority employees

The BMA suggests fees for non-NHS work, which is not covered under a GP's NHS contract, to help GPs set their own professional fee. However, these fees are guidelines only not recommendations, and a doctor is not obliged to change the rates suggested.

Why does it sometimes my GP a long time to complete my form?

Time spent completing forms and preparing reports takes the GP away from the medical care of his or her patients. Most GP's have a very heavy workload – the majority work up to 70 hours a week – and paperwork takes up an increasing amount of their time, so many GP's find they have to take some paperwork home at night and weekends.

I only need a doctor's signature – what is the problem?

When a doctor signs a certificate or completes a report, it is a condition of remaining on the Medical Register that they only sign what they know to be true. In order to complete even the simplest of forms, therefore, the doctor might have to check the patient's entire medical record. Carelessness or an inaccurate report can have serious consequences for the doctor with the general medical council or even the Police.

What will I be charged?

The BMA recommends that GPs tell the patient in advance if they will be charged and how much. It is up to the individual doctor to decide how much to charge, but at Cross Deep Surgery we have a list of fees in the waiting area and our website based on these suggested fees.
